

OPEN UP TO WINDOWS 11

Support for Windows 10 will cease in October 2025. Ages away, right?

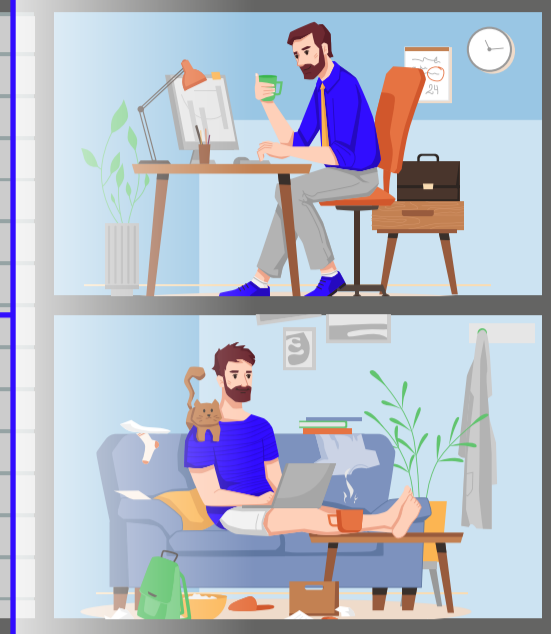

Well, it all depends on your view: on the one hand, why change something that still works? On the other hand, why deprive your organisation and staff of the myriad benefits the new and improved operating system will deliver in the meantime!

TAKE A LOOK AT WHAT YOU'RE MISSING OUT ON RIGHT NOW:

Optimised for hybrid working

Allowing those employees who split their time between their home and the office to pick up exactly where they left off.

Collaboration at its core

Literally. Teams has been built into the very core of the new OS, meaning in the era of collaboration, users can launch directly into meetings or chats with the single click of an icon on the taskbar.

Quite the performance

Surely the top of the list for any business? Windows promises that 11 will offer faster boot times and much snappier navigation of web-based services. It also uses less energy which translates to longer battery life for those on the move, either between rooms or on actual journeys.

Safety first

Windows has made a point this time round of spotlighting Windows 11's security credentials. Protections have been added at chip and cloud level to ensure company assets remain locked down no matter where an employee might be working from.

Safety first (again)

In addition, key security features like hardware-based isolation, encryption, and malware prevention are turned on by default, and all these components work together in the background to keep users safe without sacrificing quality, performance or experience.

WHY MAKE THE MOVE NOW?

- Last-minute migrations may have unexpected implications.
- New devices will start to be manufactured as Windows 11 only, so you may end up with a mixed estate.
- Once Windows 11 has been released, there will be no enhancement upgrades to Windows 10 (but it will be patched).
- Customers still on Windows 7 will struggle the most – important consideration for the public sector in particular.
- It can be stressful to manage the move to Windows 11 and do a device refresh at the same time, especially with current constraints.
